

POLICE WILL WATCH COAL DISTRIBUTION

General Order Calls Upon Department to Assist Fuel Officers.

SAFEGUARD FOR POOR

Engineers Draft New Rules for Heating Homes of America.

PUBLIC MUST BE FRUGAL

Experts Offer Combinations to Suit Requirements of Every Furnace.

The aid of the Police Department has been invoked to check evils likely to come in the wake of the coal shortage. Commissioner Enright yesterday distributed among members of the department, in circular form, a letter from William H. Woodin, State Fuel Administrator, outlining plans for distribution of coal under the peddler pool plan put into effect some weeks ago, and advised the police that he expects the regulations to be enforced strictly.

"With the advent of cold weather and the demand from the poor for coal in small quantities which will come at that time," the order says, "it is of the greatest importance to have the regulations as to price and the city ordinances as to weights fully enforced. Commanding officers will give this special attention and where violations are found, proper proceedings will be instituted."

State Order Included.

"The following copy of a letter from State Fuel Administration is forwarded for your information and necessary attention:

"Commencing October 27, 1922, and until further notice, all anthracite of the sizes known as stove, chestnut or range, dumped at the New Jersey railroad terminals for delivery to dealers and distributors in the boroughs of The Bronx, Manhattan, Kings, Queens and Richmond, on arriving by rail at the yards of retailers or distributors in those boroughs, shall be known as peddlers' pool coal, and no delivery to any consumer shall be made from such peddlers' pool in excess of one ton. In the boroughs named coal sold in units of 100 pounds shall be sold at the following prices:

"1. Maximum of 70 cents per 100 pounds to the household consumer when sold at the dealer's yard.

"2. Maximum of 85 cents per 100 pounds to the household consumer when sold at the cellar or peddler's place of business."

The order was signed by William H. Woodin, State Fuel Administrator. Rules for the use of fuel in American homes have been drawn up by the fuels division of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, which, in making them public yesterday, warned that consumers must be vigilant in economy if acute conditions are not to result from the threatened shortage.

New habits must be fostered, old practices modified, and householders must be willing to experiment, according to a statement accompanying the rules, which were prepared by Prof. L. P. Brockenridge of Yale University, chairman of the fuels division, and Assistant Prof. E. H. Lockwood of Yale.

The fuels division will hold a joint session with the Stoker Manufacturers' Association at the four day annual meeting of the society, which opens in the Engineering Societies Building tomorrow. During the war, it was stated, mechanical engineers aided in meeting fuel conditions by formulating rules to encourage economy. The present situation, in the opinion of the executive committee of the division, warrants the engineering profession in renewing assistance.

It is possible, according to these experts, that necessity will compel more persons to learn to burn the smaller sizes of anthracite this winter—a condition which they regard as very desirable.

Combinations Suggested.

Stove and nut anthracite are called ideal fuels for heating homes. Scarcity and cost of these fuels, the engineers said, will restrict their use in the future. Small sizes of anthracite are recommended. Gas coke in connection with anthracite pea or buckwheat coal is described as an excellent combination, "as the fire will keep well but will give heat when required."

Block wood in conjunction with anthracite pea or buckwheat coal is styled "a good combination where wood is available, equal to coke for producing heat, but requiring more attention."

"Bituminous coal," the rules say, "can be used in most furnaces designed for hard coal. The exceptions will be found in cases where the fine passages are small and not easily cleaned. Bituminous coal demands more attention, and unless this is given will give out less heat. Best results will be found where the furnace is rather large for the home, so that the fire does not have to be pushed."

The rules, which are being distributed generally by the society, contain minute instructions for the management of furnaces in burning the more common types of fuel.
